Schools are required by federal and state laws to maintain certain records and make these available upon request. The federal Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA) and the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) establish the minimum requirements school systems must meet in maintaining, protecting, and providing access to students' school records.

School districts usually require parents to sign a "release of information" form before they will provide copies of school records. Although computers have eliminated some paperwork, such as paper memos, for the most part, forms, reports, and other papers are still needed. Examples include:

- Student progress reports and parent notices
- Lesson plans
- Intervention plans or growth plans
